COURSE SYNOPSIS:

This one-day course is designed to help postgraduate students and researchers, especially those who are new or about to undertake the research journey understand the overall idea of research. The discussion will highlight important elements that are needed to know in order to determine the research methodology to be employed. Hence, this course will cover the fundamentals of research methodology by answering certain questions such as:

What is a research?

What are the types of research?

What is the backbone of a research?

What is the difference between research methodology and research Process?

How to decide on your research Process?

What are the types of research study and study Process?

What are the differences between qualitative and quantitative research?

What are other types of research method?

The course will further emphasize the common types of research and research design. Discussions on Qualitative vs. Quantitative, data collection techniques, analysis approaches, and methods on doing the analysis will support the writing of research objectives and research methodology of a thesis. Subsequently, hands-on activities will follow where participants shall identify the details of the research method related to their topic of research.
