REPORT

Today, professional development runs the gamut from one-shot workshops to more intensive job-embedded professional development, which has teachers learn in the day-to-day environment in which they work rather than getting pulled out to attend an outside training. Advancements in technology have propelled the education sector in the last few decades. As the name suggests, the high tech approach to learning utilizes different technology to aid students in their classroom learning. Many professional teachers use computers and tablets in the classroom, and others may use the internet to assign homework. The internet is also beneficial in a classroom setting as it provides unlimited resources. Teachers may also use the internet in order to connect their students with people from around the world. Thus, pedagogy has been evolving to better support 21st-century skills and ideas. The traditional classroom lecture is no longer as effective as it once was. Teaching has expanded to include new forms of learning, like interactive and collaborative projects and online and remote curricula, and to accommodate more flexible schedules. Real-world scenarios and cultural differences are being taken into account, affording students new ways to acquire, construct and organize their learning. Pedagogy is shifting focus beyond basic memorization and application of simple procedures to aiding students in higher-order learning, including critical thinking skills, effective communication, and greater autonomy.

Therefore, as an initiative by IQAC, Shri Ram College, a 8 day workshop was conducted which was co-ordinated by Faculty of Bioscience to aware faculties about the new teaching techniques and changing educational pedagogy with the following objective.

1. Strategies for better professional teacher development
2. Standards of effective pedagogy.
3. Teaching methodologies and paradigm shift.
4. To incorporate latest scientific research in teaching profession.
5. Learning 21st century skills to meet the expectations for teaching and teaching profession.
